

Online Course Design and Delivery (OCD²)

Recovering from the COVID Scramble

Many folks were suddenly thrust into teaching online this past Spring, Summer, and Fall who had thought they never would venture into the cyberspace of remote learning. Some of you were able to complete our training course for best practices in teaching online (or another approved training), and some were just trying to stay sane in the “COVID Scramble” to go online any way feasible. Now is a chance for you to complete training if you have not yet done so. You can learn some of the educational theories behind best practices in remote education as well as learn about instructor presence, active learning, tools and tips to connect with students and try to make what we are doing about learning rather than surviving a pandemic.

Your options:

Winter Break Crash course - December 11 through January 15

Because of the way this Fall semester worked out, the cohort of folks who signed up for the Fall session are carrying over through Fall intersession. Come join us and you can fill in the parts the others have already done while working together to create awesome classes for Spring 2021!

Official Spring OCD² class -
Regular 16-week term
January 18 through May 14

Start Fresh and take your time. During the regular 16-week term the time I am asking from you to work on the assignments for this course will take 6 to 10 hours per week (some weeks not as much). Most of this is reading chapters from our textbook and articles from SOTL.

Be aware this is a “real” online course with assignments and due dates and an expectation that you will complete the amount of work usually required in a 3-credit-hour course. The basic design is for asynchronous learning, but we may decide to schedule regular synchronous meeting times agreeable to all who wish to participate.

How to join the fun!

Please complete the attached registration form and send to Elaine W. Clark ewclark@unm.edu
You can also email Elaine with any questions.

- If you are a new hire and are not yet “in the system,” there is another step you will need to take. Contact Elaine W. Clark to learn what to do in that case.
- If you need to take this class for actual credit on a UNM transcript, also contact Elaine W. Clark for what to do.

Recovering from the COVID Scramble!

Registration:

Full name as appears in Loboweb/Banner: Click or tap here to enter text.

UNM Net ID (the first part of your UNM email): Click or tap here to enter text.

Division/Campus: Click or tap here to enter text.

Course(s) you teach for UNM-Valencia: Click or tap here to enter text.

Select the training in which you plan to participate

- ☐ Winter Break Crash Course – Dec. 11 through Jan. 15
- ☐ Official Spring OCD² class – Jan. 18 through May 14